Castiglione's "The Book of the Courtier" is a classic work of Renaissance humanism. It is a dialogue in which a young man, called the "courtier," is instructed by a group of men on how to behave in a courtly setting. The book is divided into two parts: the first part deals with the qualities of a courtier, and the second part deals with the qualities of a woman. The book is written in a clear and elegant style, and it is a masterpiece of Italian literature.
